THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL OF A LAWYER'S OFFICE.

ionable Church-The Cup that Cheers-A Simple Problem.

(For the Dispatch-Copyrighted, 1888.) One day last summer I went into a lawyer's office. I climbed up a flight of justy stairs, turned to the right, walked down a hot, dingy passage-way until I came to a door and knocked hard. There was no response. Everything was too "Come in" to myself and walked in. It solid lunch-routes. It is safe to say the was very warm. The windows were open, and the hot air came quivering in from the blistering street and went around the office in aluggish waves warping the big aw books on the baize-covered table. "I always give up my seat to an old lady," said a young man who crosses a crowded ferry twice daily. "Young women can stand as well as a tired fellow who has been on his feet all day. When they come on board street-car or boat, I washed gold and silver. The earth and the robbish are thrown in at the head of the shineway and washed and sifted by each shine until nothing but the finer particles float onward to the quicksilver basin. The scene is almost as picturesque as some of Bret Harte's descriptions. This novel "claim" is expected to yield $7,000 or $8,000 werth of the precious metal.
